Cookies

Cookies are small text files that are sent to the user's device (usually to the user's browser) by visited websites; they are stored in the user's device to be then retransmitted to the websites on the user's subsequent visits to those websites. The General Decision refers to cookies and other similar tools (such as web beacon/web bug, clear GIF and others) that allow identification of the user or of his device.

When navigating a website, a user may receive on his device also cookies sent from other websites or web servers (the so-called "third party" cookies). This happens because the visited website may contain items such as images, maps, sound files, links to individual web pages on different domains that are located on servers other than the one where the page being visited is stored.

Cookies on users' browsers are generally present in high numbers and they may remain stored even for long periods. They are used for several purposes ranging from IT authentication to the monitoring of browsing sessions up to the storage of specific information on user configurations in accessing a given server, like the preferred language, and so on. More cookies information are available on www.allaboutcookies.org. In order to appropriately regulate these devices, it is necessary to distinguish them having regard to the purposes sought by the entities relying on them, as there are no technical features that allow differentiating them.
